A CHINESE DILEMMA

In China during the past decade of occupation by Japan, and in the stress and disruption of a civil war, the currency has suffered the greatest devaluation in modern times. Due to the melting and hoarding of metal coins by the Chinese people during the Japanese occupation, the country resorted to the use of encased postage stamps in similarity to those in use during the Civil War period in the United States.

These encased stamps, being only a temporary emergency issue, were followed by an issue of small denominational paper scripts to take the place of metal coins, thus doing away with the encased stamp money which ceased to be accepted by merchants in trade.

All holders of this stamp money were left in a sort of "holding the sack" position; the post office department would not buy back the stamps and as letter writing in China among the illiterates is practically nil, the stamps were "white elephants" on their hands.

For the benefit of this large illiterate portion of the population, the paper scripts had printed on them reproductions of the metal coins which they displaced in addition to their printed values.

Now that the communists are in control of the government in China, the currency will again be due for a change; the Nationalist money will become worthless. What the Chinese people will again be obliged to accept is anyone's guess.

GOLD WANTED

I am in the market to purchase all types of gold coins, United States or foreign. Do not advertise the price I will pay as the market fluctuates and I find it embarrassing to return coins because I cannot pay my advertised price due to market changes. It is also inconveniencing to the customer. You can be sure I am always paying top market price and you get a check the same day coins are received.

JUMBLED TYPE USED TO PRINT EARLY CANADIAN BANK NOTES

An early Canadian bank was not only an exponent of thrift but also believed in practicing that virtue in the matter of issuing its own currency.

In 1818 the newly chartered Quebec Bank of Quebec decided to issue its own notes. Although capitalized at 298,900 Spanish dollars, the Board of Directors of this bank decided they would not expend any of these silver dollars on engraving any fancy plates for their note issue, but decided to economize by having their notes printed in Canada which was an exception from the usual procedure by Canadian Banks of having them engraved in New York.

In deciding to have the notes printed, the directors of the Quebec Bank were in a dilemma of their own making. To print was to risk the chance of counterfeiting, even though, in those days, the penalty for that crime was death. The alternative - to engrave - was, as previously considered, too expensive; besides there wasn't an engraving firm in Canada equipped to handle the job. To solve their problem the directors consulted John Neilson owner and editor of the "Quebec Gazette": "I can serve you" said he. "I have a great deal of old type out of use. I shall make up a note in type, every letter of which shall be different or nearly so. It will be impossible for anyone in Canada or elsewhere to imitate the note." The directors fell in with his suggestion, and thus, at comparative little expense and without fear of counterfeiting, the notes were printed and put into circulation.

Now a great many of these queer bank notes were printed and put into circulation, but only one, a ten dollar bill, is known to have survived to the present day. It is in the archives of the Royal Bank of Canada, in the head office at Montreal, and is unique amongst paper money.

A DEMOCRAT - NO DOUBT!

After his death, Julius Caesar was consecrated by the Roman Senate and in the minds of the common people assumed almost the status of a God. The tendency to deify Caesar was intensified when, during some gladiatorial games held in his memory, a brilliant comet blazed in the heavens for seven days. The awe-stricken populace of Rome believed the comet was the soul of Caesar looking down upon them from the skies. To commemorate this event, the Emperor Augustus issued a silver denarius bearing on the reverse side a picture of a comet and the words DIVUS JULIUS or "The Deified Julius."

A ROUNDABOUT APPEAL

Did you ever ask for your job back after you were fired? Thomas Simon did in what was probably the most unique manner ever attempted by one of the unemployed. Simon was not just good in his profession but was "out of this world" when it came to producing delicate coins of artistic fineness. The minted issues he produced for Oliver Cromwell have never been equalled in England before or since, but it was due to the fact that the Dutchman, John Roettiers had taken over his job, that he produced his famous Petition Crown of 1663 in hope of securing his reinstatement at the Mint. It was a clear cut masterpiece created with all the skill and experience of an expert craftsman who loved his work and hated idleness.

In tiny but standout letters around its edge he effectively stated his case:

"THOMAS SIMON Most Humbly Prays Your MAJESTY To Compare This His Tryall Piece With The Dutch And If More Truly Drawn & Emboss'd More Gracefully Order'd And More Accurately Engraven To Relieve Him."

NOSE REVEALS WHAT COIN CONCEALS

King Henry VIII was one of the original believers in "A King can do no wrong!" However, this English monarch was without a doubt the world's worst counterfeiter. The royal proboscis, stuck into everybody's business including his own, finally proved his undoing when it came to fooling his subjects. Henry debased the English currency to such a point that he became known to his people as Old Copper Nose, and it didn't take much handling of his supposedly silver coins to uncover the real truth.

The kingly beak, not handsome by English standards, was raised too high, and soon undiluted copper came shining through. A smug cover-up was used as a motto on his coins - "I have the Lord as my helper!"
